Jean Noelle,

The enclosed letter was sent today to Mr Ladsky. It is self-explanatory, but comes in the wake of a telephone call on Saturday and a rude letter sent on Sunday. Given the extreme nature of the behaviour, and the fact that I am getting no peace, I have written.

The conversation with Mr Ladsky was one sided, consisting simply of him ranting and becoming increasingly offensive and threatening, and me writing it all down. It is fair to say that the contents of the call were incoherent at times, but I would describe them as beyond belief. Mr Ladsky was immensely aggressive and not prepared to accept any statement intended to calm him down. If I spoke, he threatened all the more. It augurs very badly for the fact that he could be our landlord in the very near future.

I hope that, if he understands that threats and abuse will not work, he may take a calmer line, but I do not consider it likely in the face of what happened yesterday and has happened so far.

His last call to me was at 12.40 am, which can hardly be described as reasonable.

I will let you know what the position is, should there be any developments.

Best wishes,
