

This was the first of 4 letters to Adam Crozier.
My last one was 1.5 years later: 02.11.06 in which I summarised what had been taking place. I also copied him on my 07.11.06 letter to Postwatch

Dear Mr Crozier

- As demonstrated by subsequent events, what was taking place was not due to 'incompetence': it was done deliberately
- The reason? Punishment for 'my daring' to complain against, and challenge various parties in the Establishment (see Doc library) - and dishing it out by using criminal psychological harassment: header 1.8: "using something, personal, private information to make the person feel vulnerable"
- See Persecution # 3.2 demonstrating undeniable involvement by the police in the interception and retention of my post

A desperate means for a desperate need

When my regular Postman (Steve(?)) is off, the mail is left in the main entrance in the block of flats where I live (whereas Steve delivers it to the letter box in my flat). It means that some of my mail (important documents) 'disappears'. (Taken by somebody in the block).

To protect myself from this, I initially set-up a 'Keepsafe' service at my local sorting office (in Chelsea Manor Street, London SW3 3UH) whenever Steve was away. I did this on several occasions. However, there were 2-3 instances of some of my mail being delivered instead of being kept at the sorting office. Every time I complained at the sorting office.

Two years ago I opted to have what is described as "Collect Box – Annual" service hoping that this would prove more reliable. It has not – at least for letters addressed to my home address. I have complained about this to the sorting office 2 – 3 times over the last year, including phoning the Customer Complaints helpline (who, I know, contacted the sorting office at the time).

Every time, I have stressed how critical it was for me to ensure reliability of service. I have offered to pay whatever was necessary to ensure this. Last week, I again found my mail lying around in the entrance.

To my immense frustration, I am unfortunately forced to use your service. I have just received the attached invoices for £108.00 for the next 12 months renewal. I am so desperate that I am opting to pay 5 times the amount i.e. £540.00 (enclosed, [REDACTED]). Will this be enough Mr Crozier to ensure that my mail is kept at the sorting office when my regular Postman, Steve, is not around?

Earlier on I stated "at least for letters addressed to my home address". Those for which I can give my PO Box number are kept at the sorting office. However, I do have concerns that anybody who knows my PO Box number could potentially collect my mail. My mentioning this is prompted by the fact that some time last year, I was able to collect my mail from a member of staff who had never seen me and did not ask to see my P.O. Box number card. Having complained about this, I 'think' that the system was tightened-up. I have not dared testing it again. It causes me a lot of anxiety.

Thank you in anticipation of your assistance

Yours sincerely
